Customer page: what the public sees, and the Owner's switch

A public web page, opened from a QR code at the restaurant, showing ECCS's hygiene score and inspection result. Off until the Owner turns it on.

Who controls it	The Owner turns it on or off; ECCS approves every photo and can take a page down.
Time limits	An inspection drops off after 180 days; a photo after 90 days.
Data about visitors	None asked for. No cookies, trackers or analytics. Server logs keep the IP address, browser and time.

Show my page to customers

Turning it on shows, to anyone with the QR code or the link:

- your restaurant's name and city
- ECCS's latest inspection, once there is one: score, grade, date and report number
- on how many of the last 30 days your daily checklists were handed in
- the dates of recent ECCS services and their certificate numbers
- your FSSAI licence number
- kitchen photos that a person chose and ECCS approved

It never shows staff names, the checks inside a checklist, their answers, problems, times, prices or bills.

ECCS's inspection drops off the page by itself when it is more than 180 days old, and a photo 90 days after it was taken.

Only the Owner can turn the page on or off.

THE CONFIRMATION BEFORE THE PAGE GOES LIVE

Show this page to customers? Anyone who scans your QR code will see yesterday's hygiene score, whether your daily checklists were done, and ECCS's inspection once there is one, whatever they are. You can turn it off at any time.

2. Photos proposed for the page

Choose photos that show clean equipment and surfaces. ECCS's office checks every photo before customers see it.

No people, no faces, no customer areas, nothing that identifies staff.

Photos come from ECCS's visits or from your own daily checks. ECCS looks at each one before it appears. A photo is shown for 90 days from the day it was taken. You can remove any photo at any time.

3. What the public page says about itself

The page is opened by scanning the restaurant’s QR code. It sets no cookies, uses no trackers or analytics, and asks search engines not to list it.

RIGHT UNDER THE SCORE

ECCS is a private company that this restaurant pays to clean and service its kitchen. ECCS is not associated with FSSAI, TG-SAFE or any other government body.

AT THE END OF THE PAGE: "ABOUT THIS PAGE"

ECCS is a private company that this restaurant has engaged, and pays, to clean and service its kitchen.

ECCS is not part of, and is not associated with, FSSAI, TG-SAFE (Telangana's food and drugs authority) or any other government body.

Nothing on this page is a government rating, licence, inspection or certificate. The score and any inspection result on this page are ECCS's own.

The ECCS hygiene score is not the FSSAI Hygiene Rating.

What this does not cover

- It shows what was recorded for the days stated. It cannot promise how the kitchen is today.
- It says nothing about the taste or quality of the food, the service or the dining area.
- It is not a promise that the food is safe for you. If you have an allergy, ask the staff.
- The restaurant chooses whether to show this page, and can turn it off at any time.

The score has three parts. ECCS's latest inspection counts for up to 60 points, if it was carried out in the last 180 days. The restaurant's licences count for up to 10 points when they are in date with a copy on file with ECCS. The day's checklists count for up to 30 points when they are handed in, and on time. The licences and the daily checks are as the restaurant itself has recorded them. ECCS does not verify licences with the authorities.

Not a government rating

FSSAI licence number, as the restaurant gave it to ECCS: [FSSAI number]

Every restaurant must display its FSSAI licence. You can check a licence, or make a complaint, on FSSAI's own website (foscos.fssai.gov.in) or in its Food Safety Connect app.

To check that this page is genuine, call ECCS on [support phone].

Points for the lawyer

1. The page publishes ECCS's score and grade (A+, A, B) of a named restaurant. Risks: a restaurant disputing a low grade (defamation, negligent misstatement), and diners or authorities confusing it with FSSAI's Hygiene Rating (one to five smileys, by agencies FSSAI recognises). Should the grade letters stay?
2. Photos could show people. The rule above forbids it and ECCS approves every photo. Is that enough?
3. Is the wording above enough to make clear that ECCS is private, paid by the restaurant, and not associated with FSSAI or TG-SAFE?
